ARMY OF CHILDREN FULLY 5,000 STRONG ATTENDS

"THE" M'MANUS MAY DAY PARTY IN CENTRAL PARK.

Nearly All the Children in the Fifteenth Assembly District Join the Marching Throng

A long line of children—an almost endless line, it seemed—went crawling through Eighth-street into Central Park to-day. There were 5,000 of them and they were the babies of the constituents of "The" McManus, the Fifteenth District statesman.

At the entrance to the park stood two beautifully gowned women. Each was watching a baby trundled along by a nurse in a baby carriage-perambulator on Central Park West.

"My goodness!" exclaimed one of the women, "what a lot of common children. Where do they all come from?"

"Madam," remarked the McManus, "two honest and good mothers in the Fifteenth."

The two women grew red in the face and disappeared, while the long line wound its way further into the park.

A Real "Baby Walk."

From the highways and the byways of the Fifteenth, which takes in the Portals and Tenth and Eleventh avenues, the children poured out of the big tall tenements for this the greatest day of their young lives. It was to be "A Baby Walk," and it surely was one. Only the children of the tenements, who run the livelong day over the hard streets of the town could have stood the pace which they were led to-day.

Starting at Forty-ninth street, the procession with women at the head, acting as policemen and holding up trucks with more vigor and strenuousness than a Broadway policeman, moved over to Third avenue, down Tenth avenue to Forty-eighth street, Ninth avenue to Forty-ninth street, to Eleventh avenue, to Forty-eighth street, to Columbus avenue, to Eighty-first street, to Park. Any truckman who didn't hold up got his horse switched over the noses, and he didn't swear at the women policemen, either.

The little legs of the four and five and six year olds were pretty tired when they reached that portion of the park where they were to spend the day, but they forgot all about it and turned in to have the fun kind of a time.

That as much enjoyment might be jammed into the day as possible, an early start was arranged. There were crowds of children around the McManus home at 7 o'clock in the morning. For two hours they came trooping from every direction, until Forty-ninth street, between Ninth and Tenth avenues, was impassable to all but "The" McManus's little friends.

With Parasols and Flags.

McManus, his brothers, his mother, and his trusted lieutenants began the distribution of parade paraphernalia at 9 o'clock. Each little girl was given a red, white and blue parasol; each boy was given a small American flag.

"I used to think it was a hard job scattering paragonage," said "The," "but it's not a hard job this."

When the flags and parasols had been distributed four boys appeared with a yellow canopy trimmed with violets and popples. This was placed in front of the McManus house, No. 452 West Forty-ninth street, and out came the King of the May—Reuben Cameron. This Reuben is a handsome little fellow, and he was actually gorgeous. He wore a Tuxedo coat, a white waistcoat, black covered trousers, patent-leather shoes and a straw hat. Taking his place under the canopy and preceded by the Charles H. Harris Orphan Boys' Band of forty-four pieces, the King of the May started out to get the Queen, Cecilia Killigrew.

"Hello," said the queen, putting out her hand shyly.

"Hello," replied the King, giving the proffered hand a hearty shake. "We've got a bully day for the party."

Side by side, under the canopy, the King and Queen marched back to Forty-ninth street, where the procession was formed with the assistance of five policemen and a roundman. Besides the Orphan Boys' Band there was the band of the Church of Ascension and the music in the life of march extending along Eighth avenue from Forty-ninth to Eighty-first street was continuous.

In the park the children were turned loose to do as they liked. Mr. McManus had arranged for adequate protection for the little ones, all of whom know him as "Tom," and none was allowed to stray outside prescribed lines. Few wanted to stray, in fact, for this is what they had to eat. Six thousand sandwiches, 100 gallons of ice cream, 10 barrels of apples, 3,000 cakes, 600 quarts of milk, and 5,000 packages of candy.

Five doctors accompanied the party. With characteristic thoughtfulness, Mr. McManus, in purchasing his supplies, did not forget to lay in a gallon of

SWEETHEART'S LETTERS TO GIRL MAY SOLVE MYSTERY.

Miss Thompson Warned Against "Beauty Mask" Treatment Which Proved Fatal.

CHICAGO, May 31.—William Turner, of Perry, Oklahoma, is expected in the city to-day, and his explanation of certain passages in letters of his to Miss May Thompson, whom he was to have married June 1 and who died yesterday while undergoing a beauty-mask treatment, may prove important evidence in solving the mystery of her death.

The young woman was suffocated. In letters Turner had written to the young woman he had cautioned her against the treatment and some woman, whom she had mentioned as jealous of her, saying that if there was any danger she had best go back on the farm and gain health by natural electricity.

In the mean time the beauty experts are doing a poor business. Women who have been accustomed to having their faces done up in plaster casts for hours at a time to bleach them have abandoned the treatment in fear. Even the masseurs are feeling the effect of the death of Miss Thompson.

The police are working on the theory that there was foul play, because in the letters Turner mentions the jealousy of the woman.

According to one of the physicians the dead woman's stomach showed indications of arsenical poisoning, but the symptoms surrounding her death are quite different from those which are usual in poisoning by arsenic. Dr. Johnson is under arrest. He denies the use of any drugs in his treatment.

MILLIONAIRES GO INTO CAMP.

Cornelius Vanderbilt and H. R. Winthrop at Peekskill with the Twelfth Regiment.

Two young millionaires left their luxurious homes to-day to go out into a militia camp at Peekskill and eat with tin spoons for a week. They will sleep on cots in tents, rise with the break of day, work like laborers, marching and digging and fighting, and turn in at night more tired than they will be again for another year.

Cornelius Vanderbilt and Henry Rogers Winthrop are the scions of rich families who are going out for $2.50 a day and the fun there is in it. Vanderbilt is Second Lieutenant of Company G and Winthrop First Lieutenant of Company H. The former is worth about $7,500,000 and the latter $6,000,000, but they are going to be just like the rest of their fellow soldiers and camp life will make no distinction between them and the poorest man in the regiment.

"We are going to have a fine time in camp," said Lieut. Vanderbilt. "I wouldn't have missed it for anything. It's true I missed going to Europe, but a man can go there any time and you can't go to camp but once in two years."

Vanderbilt Praises Regiment.

"My throat has been bothering me somewhat and the outing at Creedmoor didn't do it any good, as it was pretty wet, but I'm all right now. I expect that the week in camp will make us all feel a great deal better. We've got the finest regiment in the city and the best lot of men that any regiment ever had on its rolls, and it's a privilege to belong to it."

"What are you going to do with all the money you make out there?" some one asked him.

"That won't bother me much, I guess," he said with a smile and then he went into the armory to help get his company into shape for the journey.

Lieut. Vanderbilt, who wore his uniform home with him after his march in yesterday's Decoration Day parade, to-day rode to the Twelfth Regiment armory, at Sixty-second street and Columbus avenue, in a coupe. He arrived there shortly before 11 o'clock to find most of the regiment ready for the march over to the Central Railroad tracks along the Hudson, where two sections of a special train were waiting to take them to the State Camp at Peekskill.

The young officer seemed in fine fettle, although he has been under the care of a specialist for throat trouble for two weeks. He has given up a trip to Europe in order to participate in the outing at Creedmoor, in the Rochambeau celebration, the Decoration Day parade and the week at camp.

Company Took 103 Men. Lieut. Vanderbilt is the lowest ranking officer in the regiment. He is Second Lieutenant of Company G, which by reason of his presence is recruited to its full strength of 103 men. The rest of the regiment is very strong numerically. More than three hundred men have come in during the past year, so that the roll now carries a thousand. Of these more than 900 turned out this morning.

The men assembled at the armory at 9:30 o'clock. There were crowds of pretty girls to see them off, and a few mothers. The girls seemed to imagine that the soldiers were going to real war, for they were most affectionate in their farewells.

The regiment, under command of Col. George L. Dyer, marched to the New York Central tracks along the river and boarded a special train at Sixtieth street for Peekskill at 11 o'clock. They will march from Peekskill to the camp.

Hanged Himself in His Room.

A man who had been living at the Northern Hotel, No. 358 Bowery, for the past three weeks, where he had registered as J. Bach, was found dead in his room there to-day, hanging from a clothes line stretched to the door. Nothing was known about the man at the hotel.
